Feeding Students When the Lights Go Out: Disaster and Emergency Preparedness

In an era of increasing natural disasters, including hurricanes, floods, and wildfires, school nutrition programs serve as vital community hubs, providing essential services. This session will explore the challenges schools face during crises and how to strengthen disaster preparedness and response efforts. Representatives from USDA and experienced school nutrition directors will share actionable strategies for building resilient programs that can adapt to power outages, infrastructure damage and other disruptions. Learn how to ensure your program can continue to serve meals amid the mayhem and remain a reliable source of support for your community.
